This dwarf, globe shaped, evergreen shrub, with its lineage including the Colorado Blue Spruce, has beautiful blue needles and makes a nice splash of color in your garden, year round. This is a very dense variety and the newest growth will be a powdery steel blue. You can find it in nurseries, grafted on various heights of standards. (a stem) There are those that are low to the ground, one that lifts the plant 8" to 10", or those that are 3' in height creating a lollipop effect.

As with all spruce you will need to keep this shrub evenly water until it is well established. Pruning should not be required and should only be done to remove dead wood. Spruce are tolerant of urban pollution and should grow well in a home landscape.
