The long lasting single blooms are produced on this hardy shrub rose from early summer through fall. It has dark green foliage , which will turn yellow in autumn. In addition it produces scarlet rose hips, from mid to late fall. This is a compact shrub rose that does have thorny branches and is grown on its own root stock. This is a tough one in that it is fairly disease resistant and, like most in the Meidiland series of roses, is easy to grow.

Blooming will be more abundant if spent bloom are removed. Removing blooms will however reduce the number of hip produced. In general shrub roses like moist well drained soils, but are adaptable to various soil types. They do not grow in overly moist conditions.
