Small white flowers in flat topped clusters adorn this shrub in late spring. The fruit changes colors as it matures going from Yellow, to Red, to Black. At times all three colors can be present in the same fruit cluster giving the shrub a colorful appearance. The leaves are large and leathery and a deep dark green in color.

The viburnum grow best in moist, well drained soils but the wayfaring tree is very tolerant of dry and alkaline soils. In Colorado they will do best with some protection of the hot afternoon sun. You will find them easy to transplant and establish with in the landscape. There are very few pest or diseases which bother this plant.
