The newest leaves on this hardy shrub emerge tinged with red, turning a medium green as they mature. Color returns to these maple like leaves in the fall providing a nice show in the garden. The flowers, typical of viburnums, may not show up on this plant until it is well established. It has an upright growth habit when young, becoming rounder with age. Generally these plants do not need much pruning to stay nice looking. If you do prune you will want to do so right after they have finished blooming.

This is a long lived shrub that grows best in moist well drained soils. It is not particular to soil type or pH. It is very tolerant of urban pollution.
