This is a pretty weeping crabapple that has red buds which open to pale pink flowers. It produces a 3/8" yellow fruit in the late August to September which will show a reddish blush as it matures. These fruits are a staple for many bird species and they will be eaten from the tree so there is very little for fruit litter.

Louisa is a small ornamental which can be enjoyed all year long. It's weeping habit can be especially pronounced in winter months when viewed against snow covered landscapes. It has been rated as good to excellent in resistance to the 4 major diseases of crabapple.
